

I'm Not Intolerant, Just Exasperated

Regarding the Oct. 8 editorial "The Price of Intolerance," on Prince William County's efforts to tackle the woes of illegal immigration:

I live in Falls Church and wish my local elected officials would stand up for their constituents and uphold the law.

I have lived in the area 37 years and have seen a huge quality-of-life deterioration with the increase in illegal aliens. My town is now a gang-graffiti-stained, trash-polluted hangout where Mexicans, Salvadorans and who knows what other nationality can behave in ways not considered tolerable by our culture.

I don't give a darn if The Post calls it "intolerance." I do not want to see my tax dollars go to educate these people's children; I don't want their kids in school forming gangs. I don't want to see the bridge overpasses slathered in gang symbols, and I don't like seeing parks I once went to with my parents looking like trash dumps.
